Adobe released today the public beta of the next version of the Adobe ColdFusion application server, codenamed Splendor. As with any new server release, there are lots of new features, changes and bugfixes. It can be hard to track down where all of this is documented, so here's a brief list:

- What's New in ColdFusion Splendor
- New and Enhanced Functions and Tags in ColdFusion Splendor
- Release Notes including fixed bugs from CF9 and 10

The first link, What's New in ColdFusion Splendor, provides a textual overview of the major new features and updates in Splendor. I always find this kind of document to be a really useful gateway page to my exploration of all the new things in an application that I may otherwise overlook.

Along with the public beta of Splendor, Adobe also released a beta of the next version of ColdFusion Builder, codenamed Thunder. Information on what's new in Thunder is mostly on the New in ColdFusion page, but most of the work revolves around mobile client development and `<cfclient>`.

Enjoy!
